Chapter 170: The Lesser Divine: Duo Dragons (2)

The title of The Lesser Divine: Duo Dragons had been bestowed upon Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin by Sung Jin-Woo, marking their ascension to a level of power reserved for only the highest beings. Their journey had only just begun, yet already, they were shaping the fabric of reality itself. With the divine essence flowing through their veins and the power of creation in their hands, the Lesser Divine set forth on paths that would define the future of multiple realms.

---

1. The First Clones' Journey: Into the Abyss

Both Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin had sent their first clones into the Abyss, a dimension filled with chaotic energies and powerful forces. The Abyss was where the very fabric of existence was tested, a place where the most formidable beings honed their abilities through constant conflict and strife. For the Lesser Divine, this was an opportunity to grow stronger, challenge their limits, and expand their understanding of the universe.

As they ventured into the Abyss, the first clones engaged in endless battles with creatures that defied the laws of nature, engaging in epic duels and overcoming adversaries who sought to conquer the realms. The Abyss was a battlefield where the strong dominated, and the clones, imbued with 0.001% of Sung Jin-Woo's divine essence, were already formidable. Even the Abyss's most dangerous beings were no match for them.

However, their true mission was not just to fight, but to gather knowledge. The clones studied the Abyss’s energies, learning how to control and manipulate them, pushing the limits of their power to unforeseen heights. Their time spent in the Abyss allowed them to refine their skills and strengthen their bond with the Divine Triad's legacy.

---

2. The Second Clones: Guardians of the Divine Legacy

Back in the Palace of The Divine Legacy, the second clones of Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin found themselves immersed in the intricate workings of divine governance. The Palace of The Divine Legacy was the center of all divine operations, a place where the strongest of beings came to learn, plan, and grow.

The second clones of the Lesser Divine had one core task: to maintain the Divine Triad’s influence, secure the realm’s integrity, and oversee the creation of new domains. They were responsible for safeguarding the ancient knowledge of their forefathers and ensuring that the powers of the Divine Triad remained untouched by chaos.

In the Palace, the clones were constantly learning from the experiences of Sung Jin-Woo, Sung Su-Ho, and Ashborn, expanding their wisdom, strategies, and techniques. They studied the intricate dance of divine power, familiarizing themselves with the eternal cycles of creation and destruction. Their new abilities, powered by creation, allowed them to alter the very laws of their inner worlds, controlling the flow of time and energy with a mere thought.

---

3. The Third Clones: Subtle Agents on Earth

On Earth, the third clones of the Lesser Divine had taken on a more subtle role, disguising themselves as S-Rank hunters. Though they were not actively involved in direct combat like the first clones, their presence was just as important. The third clones' mission was to subtly influence the course of humanity’s development, guiding its evolution and ensuring that it would not fall into darkness or chaos.

Their knowledge of divine power, combined with their impeccable ability to remain undetected, allowed them to manipulate key events from the shadows. They fostered relationships with humanity’s strongest figures, subtly encouraging the rise of powerful beings while keeping an eye on potential threats. With their S-Rank hunter disguises, they played a key role in maintaining the balance between humanity and the divine realms, ensuring that the world would eventually be ready for the inevitable divine intervention that was to come.

As agents of Sung Jin-Woo, they were tasked with guiding the next generation of hunters and protecting the most critical of mortal legacies. This quiet influence was essential to their long-term goals, and the clones were constantly working to establish the foundations of a future that would be both prosperous and harmonious.

---

4. The Inner Worlds: A Realm of Creation and Expansion

The true power of the Lesser Divine: Duo Dragons came from their seven-layered inner worlds. These inner worlds were not just passive domains; they were vibrant ecosystems filled with diverse landscapes, complex life forms, and their own set of rules. Each inner world was a miniature universe, one where Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin could refine their power and explore their newfound abilities to create.

Inside their bodies, the seven layers each represented a different aspect of their being. One layer might embody their shadow powers, another their dragonic nature, and yet another their divine creativity. The layers were interconnected, allowing them to shift between different aspects of themselves at will, blending their shadow breath, divine power, and creation abilities seamlessly.

They used their inner worlds to experiment, create, and evolve. Sung Ye-Jun would experiment with fire-based constructs, forging armies of dragons and flame-breathing creatures to train and grow in power. Sung Ye-Rin would create beautiful, celestial realms, filling them with silver dragons and heavenly beings, testing her ability to nurture life and growth in her own domains.

As these inner worlds expanded, so too did their creators. Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin spent hours cultivating their inner realms, crafting civilizations, forging new species, and building worlds that would someday stand alongside those created by the Divine Triad.

---

5. New Activities Inside the Castles: Guardians and Expansion

As part of their responsibilities, Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin had begun overseeing the construction and maintenance of their respective castles — their personal domains where they would rule. The castles, placed beneath the Divine Triad's Castles, were fortified with powerful guardians and golems created by the power of Sung Jin-Woo and Sung Su-Ho.

Inside each castle, there were strategic areas for the Lesser Divine to continue their work, monitor their worlds, and prepare for the eventual day when their power would be needed on a larger scale. The butlers and assistants helped maintain the functionality of the castles, ensuring that every inch of the fortresses remained in perfect condition. The Castle Guardians, stationed both inside and outside, stood as stalwart defenders, always vigilant against any threats to their creators.

The castles themselves were not merely places of rest. They were centers of power, centers of learning, and centers of creation. Both Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin took time to visit each other's castles, exchanging ideas and refining their respective powers.

They often gathered with their second clones to discuss their findings, strategies, and the future of their domains. And as they grew stronger, they prepared for the day when they would truly ascend to the next stage of divinity.

---

6. The Path of Creation Continues

The Lesser Divine: Duo Dragons were not merely figures of power; they were creators, nurturers, and guardians. Their path was not set in stone, and their journey was one of constant evolution. The legacy of Sung Jin-Woo was secure in their hands, and as they continued to grow in power, their role in the grand scheme of existence would only expand.

Their clones would continue to influence the realms, their inner worlds would evolve, and their castles would become ever stronger. The Lesser Divine had the power of creation at their fingertips, and with each passing day, they expanded the borders of what was possible.

In time, they would become the next generation of the Divine Triad, their names etched into the annals of divinity. But for now, they continued to build, shape, and refine, preparing for the challenges and responsibilities that awaited them in the vast multiverse.